

Integrative Cardiovascular Regulation At Rest and During Exercise

In a series of studies, the COR-HELIX team investigate novel approaches to determine how the heart and arteries are regulated in response to acute and chronic biological stress. The hypothesis underpinning the programme of work is that the healthy heart is limited in its regulation of a specific cardiac output (SLOTH hypothesis).

